A Parasol, Flower and Ribbon to Match Her Gown.

LANGTRY'S NEW STAGE DRESSES

No Lack of Material in the Choice of Spring Gowns-Oddittes in Boots and Shoes -The "Lady Barter" Costumes.

NEW YORK, April 3, 1891 .- [Special correspondence of THE HERALD.]-Parasols have sprung into prominence in the shop windows; and the early spring sun even spies one here and there upon the drive in the park. They have wakened into life and activity like mushrooms. A few hours ago, they were almost unthought of as part of the season's necessary accompaniments. Now the windows are filled with them, and everyone is either buying or making one of these light, airy absurdities which shall be, nevertheless, sufficient to act as a protec-

White lace parasols are dotted here and there with bunches of violets, or whatever flower chances to be the favorite of the owner. A lively creation, seen at Riverside during the first warm smile of the sun, was of white net put on very full. From the top of the parasol hung low sprays of arbutus, which were fastened in places so as to give a careless effect.

These belts, varying as they do in style and material, are suitable for wear with all costumes. Since the long dress skirts became popular it has been necessary to make the lining of dress skirts quite ornamental, since each lift of the skirt left it plainly visible. At crossings, on muddy walks and in passing down stairs, the skirt had to be lifted or a single wearing would render it unsightly. Of course, ne woman of taste was willing to display underneath her fashionable gown a mustin lining wrinkled and shapeless with Mrs. Langtry is delighting the world of women by a magnificent exhibition of nice dresses in her play of "Lady Barter." There are five changes, each one of which seems prettier than the last.

The horsecloth referred to is a kind of goods new with the season. It comes in many shades and is diversified by large hairy spots of the same, or a contrasting color. The spots are ofttimes of ecru upon

The toque accompanying this was of white lace and arbutus sprays with pink silk pon-pons. Another parasol, as yetheld in reserve from public view, is of biack net with deep lace ruffles. Bunches of illiacs decorate the top and the inside. The parasol is small, and is not designed to be closed. On calling expeditions it is left in the carriage. At home it is preserved in a case designed specially for this purpose.

Tie long girdles have been modified for shopping and every day expeditions into deep belts which are girdle shaped. They are narrow at the back, but with a deep point in front extending several inches above and below the waist line. Very stylish ones are of black leather trimmed with silver or steel. Still more fashlonable are the all gold or all steel ones. Heavily sorgeous and glistoning are the cut silver ones which gleam and sparkle like ten thousand suns as the wearer passes by.
